Perception of Sex Education and Menstruation among Asian American Communities

Department of Asian and Asian American Studies

Ivy Lin Wu, Peggy Christoff

The purpose of this research is to gather information about sex education (in particular, menarche) in Asian American communities. Sex education and the materials taught varies throughout the world. I am curious with the depth in which certain topics are explored, and our personal experiences with sex education outside the classroom, particularly amongst Asian American girls.

Question

Do taboos around menstruation affect girls’ self perception and comfortability with their own bodies?

Introduction

The purpose of this research is to gather information about sex education (in particular, menarche) in Asian American communities. Sex education and the materials taught varies throughout the world. I am curious with the depth in which certain topics are explored, and our personal experiences with sex education outside the classroom, particularly amongst Asian American girls.

Why it is important

- Asian American children receive less sex education from their parents compared to their white counterparts.
- Lack of communication stems from cultural emphasis on respect of elders and Confucian values such as obedience to parents.
- Asian American women have higher rate of reported discomfort with body image, lower self-esteem, and negative feelings towards menstruation and sex.
- Cultural myths surrounding menstruation lead to hatred and discomfort of body.
- Higher risk of mental health issues such as depression, and anorexia nervosa.

Stakeholders

- Asian American parents
- Teachers with Asian American students
- Community Centers
- Healthcare centers
- Doctors with Asian American patients

Results

- Sample collected from Asian American women in university
- 70% reported to have had sex education
- Among those reported to have education
  - higher reported comfortability with self image
- Overall believe it is a “natural process”

Quotations

- “I used to be embarrassed of letting anyone know I was on my period. I’d sneak the sanitary products into the bathroom, wait till it was empty to open the package or rip a pad off my underwear, and if there was no in-stall waste bin, I’d sneakily find ways to throw out the trash outside.”
  - Chinese American 2nd gen.
- “I just don’t think people in Chinese culture talk about menstruation that much. Especially not the men.”
  - Chinese American 2nd gen.
- “No using tampons because it will hurt you, violate you kinda”
  - Chinese American 2nd gen.
- “It is very shameful that female talk about menstruation in front of male.”
  - Japanese 1st gen.
- “Food with cold nature. Food that too spicy or salty. Touching cold water. Need to keep feet warm”
  - Chinese 1st gen on Chinese myths

Menstrual Myths in Asia

- Japan: menstruation causes an “imbalance in taste,” so sushi cannot be properly prepared by a woman.
- Menstruating women should not be permitted to enter temple because they are “unholy” and “unclean.”
- China (Buddhism): menstruating women are “unlucky” and “unclean,” so they cannot stand in front of altar.
- China (Buddhism): menstruating women cannot participate in funeral rites.
- China: menstruation is a sign of imbalance in qi, so women cannot eat or drink “cold” things while on period.
- Girls should not wear tampons, because it will break hymen and destroy girl’s virginity.

Website

- Page on myths and taboos surround menstruation in Asia
  - Page dispelling such myths
  - Quotations from participants
  - List of resources
  - Forum for sharing experiences
  - Translation services for language barrier
  - Quiz upon entering website and exiting regarding common menstruation
    - i.e “Virgins shouldn’t wear tampons” T/F
    - “All periods last exactly a week” T/F

How can I spread the word?

- #talkbloodytome: a hashtag to raise awareness
- games for young children to learn
- forum for people to share their stories

Take the survey!

Works Cited