Flemmings, Ramsceair Jacques, "Pursual"

Closed became the door too many tried to peek inside:

What is it that was not meant to be seen?

Some did not notice, but others were made wise to the act.

Too engrossed by the desire to find that which is hidden,

Their opened eyes became sightless to the revelation of it all.

The destructive fumes from the fires created an unknown haze;

Toxins overwhelmed their minds birthing myths in their dreams,

Becoming altered as their illusions fathered fiction as a fact,

Fulfilling the fathomless lusts of that which has been forbidden,

Losing themselves in limbo where life has no guide.

Duplicating the past, like many before them, ignoring warnings and calls,

Trapped within the infinite spirals of the deceiver's maze,

The door locked from within the unworthy tireless search,

Unable to be opened until the key has been found.

This key holds a crown unable to be seen; it has an endless worth.
