Flemmings, Ramsceair Jacques, “Regret”

When I ruined the life of others, I was abandoned by the one I loved.
Her words enchanted me with the forgiveness I needed from above.
Battered and lost I became when her words held no truth,
The smile I once held onto cast me away severing its priceless roots.

Promises had become useless along with the pleas I made.
She swore she would never let me go, but my heart is what she played.
My offspring's lives I ruined because of her hurt, anger, and pain;
I caused them to suffer. My tears still fall like an everlasting rain.
