Roberto Picciotto

Epistola desde el frente

Yo sueno que estoy aqui...etc.
Calderon de la Barca

Desde la primera oscilación del alba, labio del mundo, hasta esta emanación danza de materia con materia, cabalista, todo es texto y aun la noche ha de caer como un aletazo.

Introito y responso en lenqua de luz y pluma, un cielo puntuado de pájaros y estas neuronas—

el cuervo que devora a la paloma, la carne, la podredumbre de la carne carece de mensaje, es ilusión, dice ilusorio,

Arlequin

Yo sueno que estoy aqui...etc.

Letters from the Front

[Translated by the author with Charles Molesworth]

Yo sueno que estoy aqui...etc.

From the first quivering of dawn, lip of the world, and on to this emanation of matter dancing with matter, Cabalist: all is a text, and yet the shade of night shall fall like a wing beat.

Beginning and response in the tongue of light and feather sky dotted by birds and these neurons -

the crow that devours the dove, the flesh, the rotting of the flesh, bears no message, it's only shadow, says shadily,

Harlequin.

Exemplum del poeta y la enredadera con campanillas

"yields falsehood when appended to its quotation,"
quotation.

W. V. Quine

Que quede claro, insiste Arlequin en amores, anterior a cualquier sentimiento la flor se presenta entre flores,

Example of the poet and the trellis with bellflowers

"yields falsehood when appended to its
quotation,"
quotation.

W. V. Quine

Let it be clear, insists Harlequin in love prior to any feeling, the flower appears among the flowers ligeramente fruncida, lúbrica, la trompa. Es así que la lengua tartamudea el color de su corola desviándose hacia el centro y la garganta se atraganta en silabas. Que quede claro, dice autoreferencial Arlequín, he acqui las letras que me indican, creo y me creo, soy este torrente de silabas. Sólo la abeja penetra.

with its lightly puckered lascivious shout. It's this that the tongue stammers the petals' tint sliding toward the center and the throat is choked with syllables. Let it be clear, says self-referential Harlequin, here are the letters that spell me, I found and I am founded, I'm this torrent of syllables. Only the bee enters.

Tertulia entre aristocratas

Charm, smiling at the good mouth, Quick eyes gone under earth's lid...

E.P.

Al ver adolecentes los pechos, la cintura apenas marcada, púdico Arlequín casi vuelve el rostro: la muerte, dice, no llega de sopetón; sin ser sentida se instala en mucosas y piel. El pintor se lame los labios.

En el cuadro hay un espejo. Y es así que en el desacato trivial de ion y membrana en algunas nueronas transeúntes se compone la imagen:

cetrino el canario se mece en su jaula y la niña juega con sus muñecas – habemus linguam se reprende el juglar tenemos carne sin hueso, tenemos complice del ojo—con óleo y pigmento color de velador y tapiz de oriente lúbrico el pincel gusanea su luz por la tela y dentro del marco dorado, dentro de interiores, desnuda la niña se repliega en gestos de madre.

Table talk among aristocrats

Charm, smiling at the good mouth,
Quick eyes gone under earth's lid...

E.P.

On seeing the girlish breasts and the waist barely pinched, modest Harlequin almost turns his head: death, he says, comes not of a sudden; *unheard it settles on membrane and skin. The painter licks his lips.

In the painting there is a mirror. And it is like this that in the wayward trope* of ion and synapse the image gets composed: yellow the bird swings in its cage and the girl plays with her dolls – habemus linguam, the clown catches his thought, we have boneless flesh, we have an accomplice to the eye — with oil and pigment the tint of bedlamp and rugs the brush worms its light within the gilded frame where naked the girl enfolds herself in her arms as if she were her mother.

Hacia el país donde se desconoce el remo

Habiendo llegado a buen puerto Arlequin, la niebla y el mar son deleite de lengua.

Este es el argumento, cuento de un cuento en todo su tumulto:

ahumado el héroe y más que metafísico se enmaraña en la carne – la anémona la sutil oscilación de la anémona se repite en su sangre con un vaivén de olas;

el olor a hembra, la sal de sus emanaciones conjuga todos los ritmos y sin ser señor de si en su concupicencia sustancial Arlequin supone que el sabio siempre ha de partir con la marea.

Towards the country where the oar is unknown

Having come,
Harlequin to safe harbor fog and the sea are delight of his tongue.

This is the plot of the tale of a tale in all its convolutions:

smoke-dried the hero and more than metaphysical he snares himself in the flesh – the anemone the subtle to and fro of the anemone swaying in the waves repeats itself in his blood; the salty smell of woman subsumes every rhythm and having lost his mastery of self concupiscence substantial Harlequin supposes the sage should always leave with the tide.

Paseo dominical por el Parque Central

Severo desde un principio desordena su voluntad a fuerza de bofetadas hasta otorgarse, abúlico, a todos los vicios de la percepción:

A Sunday walk in Central park

Severe from the start he disorders his will by dint of slaps to his face until he can yield to all the temptations of perception:

hacia el frente,
asimétricos, sus ojos, él, de espaldas

a lo que pudiera estar a sus espaldas, entrega su cerebro

a un destello intempestivo entre las hojas, a una porción rugosa de tronco, a unos yerbajos que empiezan a desteñir en torno a las raíces, y en esta compleción de todo lo oculto, en esta suprema ilusión, el arce en su papel de arce el sol en su papel de sol.

Meditativo, Arlequin se calla.

he faces forward asymmetically, his eyes, & there, behind his back is hidden all he's turned his back on, his mind yielding

with a flash out of synch among the leaves to a gnarled chunk of tree-trunk, to some weeds starting to fade among the roots and in this completion of all that's hidden, in this supreme illusion, the maple in its role as maple the sun in its role as sun.

TRANSLATOR'S NOTES

These five poems come from the middle of a sixteen-poem sequence: Registros (Pequeña Venecia, Caracas, 1995). Their main figure - poet, dreamer, wise clown - is known as Harlequin, and he has many literary cousins. The mediaeval jongleur, Monsieur Teste, J. Alfred Prufrock, and the Crispin of Wallace Stevens' "Comedian as the Letter C" would all nod in recognition. But here Harlequin, pressured by perception, finds himself consumed with that which he is nourished by: language. Words fall from his tongue, to his tongue, his organ of many chords. His tongue and the cordage it weaves tie him down, choke him, and lash the sails that carry him on his voyage; it helps him whistle while he passes the graveyard. And the tongue reminds us that while language takes us beneath or above the world, our need to taste brings us back into it. The sensuous philosopher: a comic figure only poetry could invent and only language could confound.
